82. List and describe the 5Cs.

ANSWER: The 5Cs are customer, company, context, collaborators, and competitors. These Cs help us assess any particular business problem or opportunity in terms of a general analysis of the entire business situation. The customer and company are obviously the central players in the marketing exchange. The context includes things like the macroenvironment: How are our economy and that of our suppliers doing? What legal constraints might we face? What cultural differences do our global segments manifest? The collaborators and competitors are the companies and people we work with versus those we compete against, although drawing the line is sometimes difficult in today's global, networked economy.

83. Define STP and explain how it influences the marketing process.

ANSWER: STP stands for segmentation, targeting, and positioning. The STP part of marketing refers to the fact that we are very unlikely to be all things to all people, so it's best to identify groups, or segments, of customers who share similar needs and wants. Once we understand the different segments' preferences, and we presumably can identify our own company's strengths, we can identify the segment we should target with our marketing efforts. We then strike up a conversation and relationship with that target segment by positioning our product to them in the marketplace via the 4Ps.

85. Why is it important to not go overboard on efforts to quantify marketing's results? Describe why segmentation strategy and advertising's results should not be overanalyzed.

ANSWER: If you go overboard to quantify marketing's results, you will get skewed results of reality. For example, suppose you are trying to assess the value of a segmentation strategy. If the segments are poorly defined, then the results of the segmentation study may not be accurate. Also, it is difficult to measure the results of advertising in the short term. The main goal of advertising should be to enhance brand image, and that takes a lot longer than short-term sales.

87. Describe the evolution of marketing.

ANSWER: At first marketing was simply product or production focused. Over time, simply building a better version of a previous product was not good enough. Marketers had to start really listening to their customers and providing what they wanted. In today's age, companies seek a true relationship with their customers instead of just trying to sell them something.

88. Describe how different functions in a business interact with marketing, and why they should understand marketing.

ANSWER:

- Accounting and finance need to understand the importance of marketing because the CEO does. With competition, you always need to be thinking about your customers.
- Salespeople understand marketing. They know that if their company makes products the customer wants, their job will be easier.
- R&D people appreciate marketing because they get jazzed when their inventions become popular. It doesn't take much marketing research to test concepts or prototypes and to veer an R&D path one way or another.

89. Describe how the 5Cs, STP, and the 4Ps fit together to develop a marketing plan.

ANSWER: To elaborate on marketing strategy and develop a particular marketing plan, start with a situation analysis, and sketch answers to the questions proposed by the 5Cs: customers, company, context, collaborators, and competitors. With that background analysis, proceed to strategic marketing planning via STP: segmentation, targeting, and positioning. Similarly, marketing tactics to execute the intended positioning derive from a customer focus: product, price, place, and promotion.
