97. How are companies using mobile apps to advertise using geo-fencing and geo-conquesting?

ANSWER: Increasingly, marketers are able to connect with mobile phone users in real time. That means mobile ads and messaging can reach consumers when they are most receptive. For example, a Massachusetts Toyota dealer felt it was missing opportunities to sell autos to nearby New Hampshire customers because these potential customers were unsure if they were exempt from Massachusetts sales taxes. The dealership's solution? It used a software tool that drew a virtual fence around the state of New Hampshire for customers who downloaded its dealer-branded app and then let the customers know they were exempt. This locational targeting of customers within designated areas is known as geo-fencing. When companies use promotions applied to their competitor's location, it is referred to as geo-conquesting. Recent geo-conquesting examples include Hyundai's messaging in Australia when customers are near Mazda and Toyota dealerships, Whole Foods' offering steep discounts versus competitors, and Dunkin Donuts' targeting those visiting competing coffee shops. Burger King used its mobile app to serve up a promotion for one-cent Whoppers for those who came within 600 feet of a McDonald's. All resulted in greater click-through rates (CTRs), conversion rates, and redemption rates than national averages. Of course, consumer privacy, with geo-tagging involving other users' actions and postings, can be a concern.

98. Why haven't some firms practiced IMC yet?

ANSWER: The logic underlying integration seems so clear and compelling that you may be wondering: What is the big deal? Why haven't firms practiced IMC all along? Why is there reluctance to integrate? Yet, what sounds reasonable in theory is not always easy to put into practice. Organizations traditionally have handled advertising, sales promotions, mobile advertising, social media, and other communication tools as virtually separate practices and organizational units rather than having generalized knowledge and experience across all tools. Furthermore, outside suppliers (such as advertising agencies, public relations agencies, social media firms, and sales promotion agencies) also have tended to specialize in single facets of marketing communications rather than to possess expertise across the board. There has been a reluctance to change from this single-function, specialist model due to managerial parochialism (e.g., a new misguided quote is "AI is the answer, now what was the question?") and for fear that change might lead to budget cutbacks in their areas of control and reductions in their authority, perceived expertise, and power.

99. Explain the five key features that undergird the philosophy and practice of integrated marketing communications (IMC).

ANSWER: The five key IMC features are:

(1) IMC should begin with the customer or prospect. The IMC approach avoids an “inside-out” approach (from company to customer) in identifying communication vehicles and instead starts with the customer (“outside-in”) to determine which communication methods that will best serve the customers’ information needs and motivate them to purchase the brand. The point of this feature is that brand managers and their agencies should not restrict themselves to only one set of communication media.

(2) Use any form of relevant contact. That is, carefully select those tools that are most appropriate for the communications objective at hand. Practitioners of IMC need to be receptive to using all forms of touchpoints, or contacts, as potential message delivery channels. The key feature of this IMC element is that it reflects a willingness on the part of brand communicators to reach the target audience efficiently and effectively by using touchpoints that fit the audience.

(3) Speak with a single voice. Coordination of messages and media is absolutely critical to achieving a strong and unified brand image and moving consumers to action. Failure to closely coordinate all communication elements can result in duplicated efforts or, worse, contradictory brand messages. In general, the single-voice principle involves selecting a specific positioning statement for a brand.

(4) Build relationships rather than engage in flings. A relationship is an enduring link between a brand and its customers. Successful relationships between customers and brands lead to repeat purchasing and, ideally, loyalty toward a brand. One way to build customer relations is the use of loyalty programs. Relationships also are nurtured by creating brand experiences that make positive and lasting impressions. This is done by creating special events or developing exciting venues that attempt to build the sensation that a sponsoring brand is relevant to the consumer’s life and lifestyle.

(5) Don’t lose focus of the ultimate objective: Affect behavior! Marketing communications ultimately must do more than just influence brand awareness or enhance consumer attitudes toward the brand. Instead, successful IMC requires that communication efforts be directed at encouraging some form of behavioral response. The objective, in other words, is to move people to action.

100. List and briefly describe the promotional mix elements.

ANSWER:

- Advertising.* Advertising is any paid form of nonpersonal communication of ideas, goods, or services by an identified sponsor. This includes mass media outlets such as television, magazines, newspapers, and out-of-home (billboards).
- Public relations (PR).* Public relations (PR) is an organizational activity involved with fostering goodwill between a company and its various publics (e.g., employees, suppliers, consumers, government agencies, stockholders). The primary focus of public relations in integrated marketing communications is with the marketing-oriented aspects of communications with publics (e.g., publicity, product releases, handling rumors, tampering).
- Sales promotion.* Sales promotion consists of all promotional activities that attempt to stimulate short-term buyer behavior (i.e., attempt to promote immediate sales). Sales promotions are directed at the trade (wholesalers/distributors and retailers), consumers, and at times toward the company’s own sales force.
- Personal selling.* Personal selling is paid, person-to-person communication in which a seller determines needs and wants of prospective buyers and attempts to persuade these buyers to purchase the company's products or services. Depending on the situation, personal selling outreach efforts can range from face-to-face communication to telephone sales to online contacts.

Direct marketing. Direct marketing represents an interactive system of marketing that uses one or more advertising media to effect a measurable response and/or transaction at any location. Primary methods of direct marketing include direct response advertising, direct selling, telemarketing, and the use of database marketing techniques.

5. Digital marketing/social media marketing. Digital marketing is the promotion of product and services online (e.g., search engine marketing, banner ads, mobile advertising, and location-based apps), whereas social media marketing represents a special form of online communication through which user-generated content (information, ideas, and videos) can be shared within the user's social network.

101. Debra is the brand manager for Tide laundry detergent, marketed by Procter & Gamble, and she is making the brand-level fundamental decisions in the marketing communications decision-making process. Discuss what she will be considering.

ANSWER:

The fundamental decisions in the brand-level marketing communications decision-making process include:

Targeting. Targeting lets marketing communicators deliver messages more precisely and prevent wasted coverage to people falling outside the intended audience. Selection of target segments is a critical step toward effective and efficient marketing

1. communications for both business-to-business companies and business-to-consumer companies. Companies identify potential target markets in terms of demographics, lifestyles, product usage patterns, and geographic considerations.

Positioning. A brand's position represents the key feature, benefit, or image that it stands for in the consumer's or the target audience's collective mind. Debra must decide on

2. Tide's positioning statement, which is the central idea that encapsulates the brand's meaning and distinctiveness vis-à-vis competitive brands in the laundry detergent category.

3. Setting objectives. Marketing communicators' decisions are grounded in the underlying objectives to be accomplished for a brand.

Budgeting. Financial resources are budgeted to specific marcom elements to accomplish desired objectives. Different budgeting methods include top-down budgeting (TD), bottom-up budgeting (BU), or a combination of the two (bottom-up/top-down budgeting [BUTD] or top-down/bottom-up budgeting [TDBU]).
