ESSAY

51. Define the term generation and how it impacts one's view of the world.

ANS: A generation is a social grouping of people born within a defined time period that share similar cultural traits, values, and preferences. They provide a way to understand how different formative experiences (such as world and economic events, technology, and social changes) interact with the lifecycle and aging process to shape people's views of the world.

DIF: Easy

REF: AACSB, Societal impact

52. What are the three general paths to an entry-level position in HR?

ANS:

- A college degree in talent development or HR.
- A college degree in a related subject, such as business administration or instructional design, and then applying those skills to talent development through experience and/or earning appropriate certification.
- Working for several years in an operational role in a company, then transitioning into talent development. For example, most sales training is conducted by people who have demonstrated success in a sales role.

DIF: Easy

REF: AACSB, Foster lifelong learning

53. What is the impact of human capital on organizations, and how does this impact human resource strategy?

ANS: Talent development plays a major role in the competitiveness of individuals, organizations, regions, and societies. The availability of skilled talent is a major factor in attracting and growing industries in a region and is now cited by economic developers as the major factor in site selection decisions. Individual organizations strive to align talent development with their strategic goals to gain a competitive advantage in their industry, whether for-profit or nonprofit.

DIF: Moderate

REF: AACSB, Knowledge, skills, and abilities

54. Compare and contrast the concepts of training and development.

ANS: Training refers to the process of learning the skills necessary to perform a particular job or activity more effectively. Development refers to learning experiences designed to prepare employees for different and expanded roles in the organization. Thus, training generally refers to learning activities designed to help employees in their current role, and development is future focused.

DIF: Easy

REF: AACSB, Knowledge, skills, and abilities

55. Define the term employer brand and describe its impact on talent.

ANS: The employer brand describes an employer's reputation as a place to work. When an organization invests in its people, it has a positive impact on the employer brand. Just as a brand reputation is a potential customer's opinion about the value of the products or services of the company, the employer brand represents the opinions that potential new hires (and existing employees) have of the firm. Satisfied employees are an organization's loudest voice, particularly in an age of social media and user-generated feedback where employers aren't always completely in control of their own reputation.

DIF: Moderate

REF: AACSB, Knowledge, skills, and abilities

56. Describe the two components of employee engagement and how they affect discretionary effort.

ANS: Employee engagement can be considered as two components: attitudinal and behavioral. As an attitude, engagement represents an employee's focus, effort, motivation, and passion for the job. It also includes emotional commitment to the organization and its objectives. But it is when these positive attitudes and feelings transfer into workplace behaviors that the results of employee engagement are reflected in business results. Engaged employees are motivated to exert more effort to do whatever it takes to achieve high levels of performance, not just because they should or are told to, but because they want to. Discretionary effort is the difference between the level of activity one is capable of bringing to a work task and the minimum level required.

DIF: Hard

REF: AACSB, Knowledge, skills, and abilities

57. Describe the differences between the four profiles of engaged employees.

ANS:

- Highly engaged employees feel a strong personal alignment to the mission, vision, and objectives of the organization. With this emotional connection comes behavior—namely, active pursuit of opportunities to improve operations and/or the general work environment.
- Moderately engaged employees possess positive attitudes toward work and may engage in productive behaviors, but they are not fully invested in terms of commitment and significant discretionary behavior.
- Passive employees simply come to work and go through the motions without any particular interest in work. Although not as problematic as the actively disengaged, passive employees do not create a positive environment for innovation and progress.
- Actively disengaged employees Employees feel disconnected from their jobs and tend to be unsatisfied at work. Their poor attitudes and emotions spread through the organization, which can result in their own poor performance and poor performance of others.

DIF: Hard

REF: AACSB, Knowledge, skills, and abilities

58. Describe the employee life cycle and the role of talent development in each of the three major phases of the cycle.

ANS:

- The employee life cycle (ELC) is a model that portrays the journey of a typical employee from the time they first learn about an opening at the organization, through the recruitment and hiring process, until their employment ends. The nine stages of the ELC are recruitment, selection, onboarding, training, development, coaching, performance appraisal, benefits administration, and separation. These nine stages can also be grouped under three overall categories of talent acquisition, talent development, and talent retention.
- During the talent acquisition phase, the focus is on attracting a qualified pool of applicants and then selecting the individuals who represent the best potential for success for each position. Once an employee has been hired, then the talent development process begins with onboarding. However, training, coaching, and other forms of development should continue as long as the employee is with the organization. Retention refers to motivating employees to stay with the organization. Compensation is certainly one method, but research indicates that it is not the top motivator. One of the most effective tools in employee retention is to focus on employee engagement, thus increasing commitment to the company.

DIF: Moderate

REF: AACSB, Knowledge, skills, and abilities

59. What is a learning management system (LMS) and how has this technology impacted talent development?

ANS:

- A Learning Management System (LMS) is a software application for the administration, documentation, tracking, reporting, and delivery of learning and development programs. Employers can also assess the skills of employees before and after training using an LMS. An LMS has two components:
 - A server that performs the core functions (e.g., storing and delivering course content, authenticating users, grading assessments, issuing completing certificates, sending user notifications).
 - A user interface that runs inside a browser (similar to how Canvas or Anthology work for online courses) that is used by staff, instructors, and students.
- An LMS makes it easy and efficient to create and store content, organize it into courses, deliver the content, enroll participants, and monitor and assess course progress.

DIF: Moderate

REF: AACSB, Current and emerging technology

60. What are the major differences between ADDIE and the successive approximation model (SAM)?

ANS:

- ADDIE (which stands for analysis, design, development, implementation, and evaluation) has been the mainstream instructional design model since the 1970s. It is often perceived as a linear model that provides designers with a roadmap for creating training. It also can be described as a series of ordered steps that create standardization. Some criticisms of ADDIE are that the process can lead to prolonged development cycles, cumbersome processes, and communication challenges between designers and users.
- SAM is an agile development model with multiple steps happening at the same time. The SAM process is nonlinear and iterative, allowing for evaluation and changes to the project as needed (as opposed to evaluation happening at the end of the project in the ADDIE approach). SAM also encourages ongoing collaboration between the instructional designers and customers at every stage of the development process.
