ANSWER: d

76. Distinguish between primary and secondary sources of law and give specific examples of each.

ANSWER: There are numerous sources of American law. A source that establishes the law on a particular issue is called a primary source of law. Primary sources include the following:

Chapter 1 - Law and Legal Reasoning

- The U.S. Constitution and the constitutions of the various states.
- Statutory law—including laws passed by Congress, state legislatures, and local governing bodies.
- Regulations created by administrative agencies, such as the federal Food and Drug Administration.
- Case law (court decisions).

A secondary source of law is a book (or article) that summarizes and clarifies a primary source of law. Legal encyclopedias, compilations (such as Restatements of the Law, which summarize court decisions on a particular topic), official comments to statutes, treatises, articles in law reviews published by law schools, and articles in other legal journals are examples of secondary sources of law. Courts often refer to secondary sources of law for guidance in interpreting and applying the primary sources of law discussed here.

77. A case, SAC v. Houben, is before Judge Thomas. Judge Thomas is a judge in Ohio Common Pleas court and must follow stare decisis when deciding this case. How will stare decisis be applied, and what are the advantages of following stare decisis in our American legal system?

ANSWER: In a common law legal system, past judicial decisions are binding in current disputes with similar facts. This feature of common law, which is the basis of the American legal system, is unique because, unlike the law in other legal systems, it is judge-made law. Within the common law system, when possible, judges attempt to be consistent and to base their decisions on the principles suggested by earlier cases. The body of principles and doctrines that form the common law emerged over time as judges applied the principles announced in earlier cases to subsequent legal controversies. The practice of deciding cases with reference to former decisions (or precedents)—the cornerstone of the American legal system—is called the doctrine of stare decisis. Under this doctrine, judges are obligated to follow the precedents established within their jurisdictions. This helps courts to be more efficient and makes the law more stable and predictable.

78. Mona is asked to brief a case for a Legal Environment of Business class. Detail what process Mona should use.

ANSWER: The basic steps of the legal reasoning process remain the same. These steps form what is commonly referred to as the IRAC method of legal reasoning. IRAC is an acronym formed from the first letters of the words Issue, Rule, Application, and Conclusion. To apply the IRAC method: Issue—What are the key facts and issues? Rule—What rule of law applies to the case? Application—How does the rule of law apply to the particular facts and circumstances of this case? Conclusion—What conclusion should be drawn?

79. The legal system in Alabama has two pending cases that involve different issues regarding stare decisis. First, Briggs v. Jones, an earlier Alabama case, decided a computer software issue based on now-outdated technology. A current case, Alston v. Rawls, involves a similar issue. In a second case, Randall v. Palmer, a technology issue is presented that has never been decided because the technology is new. Is the court in Alston v. Rawls required to follow the holding in Briggs v. Jones? Why or why not? In Randall v. Palmer, what may the court base its decision on in the absence of any controlling precedent?

ANSWER: The practice of deciding cases with reference to former decisions (or precedents)—the cornerstone of the American legal system—is called the doctrine of stare decisis. Under this doctrine, judges are obligated to follow the precedents established within their jurisdictions. This helps courts to be more efficient and makes the law more stable and predictable. Although courts are obligated to follow precedents, sometimes a court will depart from the rule of precedent. If a court decides that a precedent is simply incorrect or that technological or social changes have rendered the precedent inapplicable, the court may rule contrary to the precedent, and this is likely in the first scenario here. Regarding the second scenario, occasionally, courts must decide cases for which no precedents exist, called cases of first impression. When deciding cases of first impression, courts often look at persuasive authorities. A persuasive authority is a legal authority that a court may consult for guidance but that is not binding on the court. A court may consider precedents from other jurisdictions, for instance, although those precedents are not binding. A court may also consider legal principles and policies underlying previous court decisions or existing statutes. Additionally, a court might look at fairness, social values and customs, and public policy (governmental policy based on widely held societal values). Federal courts can also look at unpublished opinions (those not intended for publication in a printed legal reporter) as sources of persuasive authority.

80. Local government in Newport Township passes a noise ordinance. The Environmental Protection Agency passes a regulation regarding air pollution. The U.S. Constitution is amended to allow sixteen-year-old people the right to vote. The Ohio state constitution is amended to allow women the right to reproductive health care under a right to privacy. A federal statute is passed that requires all medical marijuana dispensaries to pay 40 percent of their profits to the federal government. List these laws and regulations in hierarchical order, and explain the reasons for your listing.

ANSWER: Primary sources of American law include the following: The U.S. Constitution and the constitutions of the various states, statutory law—including laws passed by Congress, state legislatures, and local governing bodies, regulations created by administrative agencies and case law (court decisions). The U.S. Constitution is the basis of all law in the United States. It provides a framework for statutes and regulations and thus is the supreme law of the land. A law in violation of the U.S. Constitution, if challenged, will be declared unconstitutional and will not be enforced, no matter what its source. Unless it conflicts with the U.S. Constitution or a federal law, a state constitution is supreme within that state's borders. Thus, the amendment to the U.S. Constitution is the highest law here, and the amendment to the Ohio state constitution is the next highest law here. Laws enacted by legislative bodies at any level of government make up the body of law generally referred to as statutory law. Statutory law also includes local ordinances. An ordinance is a regulation passed by a municipal or county governing unit to deal with matters not covered by federal or state law. A federal statute, of course, applies to all states. A state statute, in contrast, applies only within the state's borders. State laws thus may vary from state to state. No federal statute may violate the U.S. Constitution, and no state statute or local ordinance may violate the U.S. Constitution or the relevant state constitution. Thus, the next highest law is the federal statute and, then, the local government noise ordinance. Finally, administrative law consists of the rules, orders, and decisions of administrative agencies. Rules issued by various administrative agencies affect almost every aspect of a business's operations. The EPA regulation is thus the law at the end of this list.
